

sessions a year around the world. I don't think that networks are funding that kind of activity."

Dick Truitt, xvp, Carl Byoir & Assocs (NYC), feels parent firms allow better control of work standards, charges & types of projects entered into, but networks do "offer extensive advantages for small, independently-operated firms."

Update: Burson-Marsteller now has 28 offices: 8 in US & 20 outside, operating in 18 countries.

Carl Byoir has 10 US & 5 international offices. Last month it opened in Singapore to serve Indonesia, Thailand, Malaysia & the Phillipines.

CANADIAN WIRE SERVICE EXHIBITS UNDERSTANDING OF PUBLIC RELATIONS

Twin Cities is not the only area where favorable views of practitioners are being expressed by media as reported last week. The Canadian Press devoted a recent bulletin to members to a short story about a fictitious reporter named Mary Italic, and Mary's good experience with "Tom Gulliver, professional PR man -- a pro with wide experience in print and broadcasting." Story tells how Mary works well with Gulliver, but must be cautious because "Mary's job is to present a complete news story to the public. Gulliver's is to show his client in the best possible light." Story concludes with thoughts on how helpful Gulliver and his colleagues despite their different objectives are.

Alden Wood, vp-pa, American Mutual (Wakefield, Mass) notes limited view of pub rel expressed, but feels "Here are newspeople coming perilously close to praising pr people!"

ANOTHER WELL-KNOWN PRACTITIONER MOVES TO IMPORTANT TEACHING POST

George King assumes responsibility for the public relations curriculum at Washington State U. as ass't prof of pr. He developed several national programs & campaigns for 1.7 million member Nat'l Education Ass'n, including its permanent theme and official song. His copyrighted public relations training programs for educators are widely used. King was ass't exec sec'y for pr, Illinois Educ Ass'n. Critics of public relations courses often cite lack of teachers with experience in the field.

WHO'S WHO IN PUBLIC RELATIONS

HONORS. Janet Diederichs (pres, Janet Diederichs & Assocs, Chi) elected to Bd of Govs, International House, Univ of Chi.

succeeded by Dirk van den Heuvel... Edward Littlejohn, vp-pa & gov't rels, Pfizer (NYC) after 16 yrs, succeeded by Robert Shafer.

RETIRES. Sara Kelley, dpr, United Cerebral Palsy Ass'n (NYC) after 10 yrs,

PEOPLE. Chuck Newton, vp, Burson-Marsteller (NYC).

Following our custom, pr reporter will not be published next week. This is the last issue in 1981 -- which prompts a reminder to order your binder now. Only $7, big enough to hold a year's issues including our three supplements.

Vol.24 No.50
December 21, 1981

CONTEMPORARY MARKETING MUST BE BASED ON PUBLIC RELATIONS PRINCIPLES, SAYS FORD PRESIDENT -- NOT VICE VERSA AS MARKETING FAD IMPLIES; "CARING ABOUT PEOPLE" ALSO ALTERS CONSUMER COMMUNICATIONS

"I am convinced," says Donald Petersen, "that consumers will respond massively" to organizations that 1) demonstrate real understanding of the contemporary market, 2) truly care for people and, 3) "consequently, can provide them with desirable, high-quality products" or services. Thus the Ford Motor pres notes that sound customer relationships, based on a public relations philosophy, must precede sales -- not the other way around as the marketing fad prevalent in education, healthcare & manufacturing seems to suggest.

In addition, "Successful marketing involves two basic communications functions," he adds. "First gathering intelligence from the market itself for planning market strategies and, second, communicating to consumers and motivating them to buy." In a speech to the Adcraft Club of Detroit, Petersen verbalized the philosophy car makers should have adopted long ago:

1. Building a listening and caring process into the corporate structure, starting in the board room.

"The products we make -- the way we design and build them, the way we advertise and promote them, the way we sell and service them -- reflect a deepening respect for each individual we serve. Each product must be created from beginning to end with the consumer's needs and desires foremost in mind."

2. Traditional consumer communications must be questioned today. Network tv must be balanced against home shopping shows on cable or local stations, advertising cassettes, video-catalogs, targeted sampling. Also video-recorders that let viewers tape favorite shows and skip over the commercials. "In the long run, there is a very real possibility that television advertising, as we have known it, may become virtually obsolete." These new communication formats are closer to public relations approaches than to advertising.

LISTENING WORKS

Product design thru consumer dialogue was used by Ford to develop its World Cars. Customers said they wanted fuel efficiency, room enough for comfort, good handling, no harsh ride, quality in every detail. Ford built this into its first thoughts for the Escort. Result: in 6 months it became the best-selling car line in America, and outsold every imported car in '81. Continued "caring for people" resulted in 50 design changes in the '82 models.

TOP GOV'T PR JOBS, CONTACTS THEY BRING,
ARE SPRINGBOARD TO HAVING YOUR OWN FIRM;
CONSIDER PETER HANNAFORD'S SUCCESS

After 32 yrs with Dep't of Labor, John Leslie didn't start a new firm but added luster to an existing one, The Kamber Group (D.C.). He cites three advantages of gov't service for pr pros: 1) an inside perspective on gov't, what it can & can't do, its motivating force (not profit as in private sector), its pressures; 2) perspective on how private sector reacts to gov't & how that reaction affects gov't; 3) invaluable contacts.

After 11 yrs in local gov't, Nancy Wolfe formed The Wolfe Group (Winston-Salem, N.C.). "It gave me the opportunity to run a pr shop. I had staffers. I was used to budgets. It gave me a better understanding of bureaucracies which exist both in the private & public sectors."

Bob Woodrum, dpa at OPM under Carter, has formed Corporate Communications (McLean, Va.). He describes his gov't yrs as "enlightening" and gives credit to "lots of exposure all across the board."

Ex-White House media liaison staffer Patricia Bario has her own pr firm (Silver Spring, Md.), is now publishing The News Summary for public readership. Coveted during the Carter adm -- but not publicly available then -- briefing summarizes 150 newspapers daily, evening network tv news & editorial cartoons. (For info write 1213 Clement Place, Silver Spring, Md. 20910.)

Benefiting mightily from gov't connections is the Hannaford Co. (D.C.). Peter Hannaford served as speech writer & advisor to Reagan. He has since bought out his partner, Mike Deaver, now White House deputy chief of staff, & absorbed another firm Potomac International owned by suspended security advisor Richard Allen. Hannaford now ranks in the top 40 firms nationwide. List of accomplishments includes:

1. Taiwan Shoe industry sought firm's help to block extension of import controls. Reagan lifted the barriers June 30.
2. Oilmen & bankers turned to Hannaford for help in getting financial concessions for a proposed pipeline to carry Alaskan natural gas thru Canada to the US. Reagan signed special financing legislation for the $43 billion project Dec. 15.
3. Tosco Oil needed help to save $1.1 billion in federal loan guarantees for a synthetic fuel project. The loan package was spared the budget cuts.

"Having Hannaford in their corner may not have been the greatest determining factor for each of these interests, but it didn't hurt them either," says article in 12/6 Washington Post.

Launching successful counseling firms gets tougher as the field matures & institutionalizes, but gov't positions provide a way to leap the barriers.

ALLEN'S STRATEGY

Explaining why he blitzed tv interview shows to defend himself against allegation that forced him to take leave as Pres. Reagan's security advisor, Richard Allen said:

"What happens generally is that my remarks wind up on your cutting room floor. So my choice has been to have formats such as this where my views could be presented in an unedited way."

A CHRISTMAS CAROL, BY COMPUTER, WITH A MORAL FOR PRACTITIONERS

You don't have to wait for the Perry Como special this year to hear the 12 Days of Christmas, but you may have to wait 'til the middle of the night for the computer version from Periphonics. The Long Island maker of computer systems that talk wanted to thank customers by programming one to sing the carol and wish callers a Merry Christmas.

Begun last year, the novel greeting this year was expanded nationwide, using 800-numbers. Due to immense coverage by newspapers & radio stations across the country, the 18 WATS lines have had to be expanded to 35 since Dec. 7th. "The telephone company told us of the line delay, and we are adding more lines as soon as they are available," Hugh Gigante, dir mktg svcs, told prr. "For every 35 callers that get a line into the system, there are 150 callers per line still waiting. The computer can handle it, but the telephone system can't."

Tho the song sounds like a recording of a woman's voice (prp finally got through by calling the local number), Gigante explains that it is, in fact, the computer. "The song was originally recorded by Dee Dee Kelly. Then it was separated into tones & syllables and stored -- much like a calculator stores numbers. Actually, the computer could sing Jingle Bells without recording again, because all the tones and sounds are there."

The program starts with the computer offering instructions. If your preference is to hear only the 8 days of Christmas or 5 days, and you have a push-button phone, you can select which days you would like to hear. The system is the "size of a thumb" and works on electrical impulses. To hear a computer sing the 12 Days of Christmas, call 800/832-1755 in New York State, 800/645-1710 outside New York, or 516/981-6000, any time, day or night, between now and Christmas. And we here at prr wish you ... luck!

MORE ON NETWORKS VS. MULTI-CITY FIRMS:
"CONTROL" OR "DIFFERENT KINDS OF THINKING"?
EITHER WAY, GROWTH FOR CONSULTANTS IS EVIDENT

Another growing network is Pinnacle Group with 8 US offices & international representation in Canada, Europe & the Far East (see prr 10/26). With only one office per city, they are controlling their growth, planning to add 4 or 5 firms this coming year. Alvin Busse, A.R. Busse & Assocs (Houston) is current chairman. Member firms meet 4 or 5 times yearly, charge each other an agreed upon hourly sum for services. "We give special attention to a Pinnacle customer -- management attention," Amelia Lobsenz, Lobsenz-Stevens (NYC) told prr. "Another advantage of a network is that you get different kinds of thinking. No matter how good a firm is with lots of offices, I think there is a tendency to be the same, which may be good but still the same. When we get together we do fantastic brainstorming. We learn things from each other. It's a unique situation."

Others feel networks cannot be compared with multi-branch firms. "The difference," says Harold Burson, Burson-Marsteller (NYC), "is control. We spend a lot of money & energy to guarantee a single standard -- professionalism. We have a lot of inter-change, and this is difficult to fund when you're a network. We get together regionally & nationally. We have training sessions. We'll have about 40 different training sessions a year around the world. I don't think that networks are funding that kind of activity."

Dick Truitt, xvp, Carl Byoir & Assocs (NYC), feels parent firms allow better control of work standards, charges & types of projects entered into, but networks do "offer extensive advantages for small, independently-operated firms."

Update: Burson-Marsteller now has 28 offices: 8 in US & 20 outside, operating in 18 countries.

Carl Byoir has 10 US & 5 international offices. Last month it opened in Singapore to serve Indonesia, Thailand, Malaysia & the Phillipines.

CANADIAN WIRE SERVICE EXHIBITS UNDERSTANDING OF PUBLIC RELATIONS

Twin Cities is not the only area where favorable views of practitioners are being expressed by media as reported last week. The Canadian Press devoted a recent bulletin to members to a short story about a fictitious reporter named Mary Italic, and Mary's good experience with "Tom Gulliver, professional PR man -- a pro with wide experience in print and broadcasting." Story tells how Mary works well with Gulliver, but must be cautious because "Mary's job is to present a complete news story to the public. Gulliver's is to show his client in the best possible light." Story concludes with thoughts on how helpful Gulliver and his colleagues despite their different objectives are.

Alden Wood, vp-pa, American Mutual (Wakefield, Mass) notes limited view of pub rel expressed, but feels "Here are newspeople coming perilously close to praising pr people!"

ANOTHER WELL-KNOWN PRACTITIONER MOVES TO IMPORTANT TEACHING POST

George King assumes responsibility for the public relations curriculum at Washington State U. as ass't prof of pr. He developed several national programs & campaigns for 1.7 million member Nat'l Education Ass'n, including its permanent theme and official song. His copyrighted public relations training programs for educators are widely used. King was ass't exec sec'y for pr, Illinois Educ Ass'n. Critics of public relations courses often cite lack of teachers with experience in the field.

WHO'S WHO IN PUBLIC RELATIONS

HONORS. Janet Diederichs (pres, Janet Diederichs & Assocs, Chi) elected to Bd of Govs, International House, Univ of Chi.

succeeded by Dirk van den Heuvel... Edward Littlejohn, vp-pa & gov't rels, Pfizer (NYC) after 16 yrs, succeeded by Robert Shafer.

RETIRES. Sara Kelley, dpr, United Cerebral Palsy Ass'n (NYC) after 10 yrs,

PEOPLE. Chuck Newton, vp, Burson-Marsteller (NYC).

Following our custom, pr reporter will not be published next week. This is the last issue in 1981 -- which prompts a reminder to order your binder now. Only $7, big enough to hold a year's issues including our three supplements.

Vol.24 No.50
December 21, 1981

CONTEMPORARY MARKETING MUST BE BASED ON PUBLIC RELATIONS PRINCIPLES, SAYS FORD PRESIDENT -- NOT VICE VERSA AS MARKETING FAD IMPLIES; "CARING ABOUT PEOPLE" ALSO ALTERS CONSUMER COMMUNICATIONS

"I am convinced," says Donald Petersen, "that consumers will respond massively" to organizations that 1) demonstrate real understanding of the contemporary market, 2) truly care for people and, 3) "consequently, can provide them with desirable, high-quality products" or services. Thus the Ford Motor pres notes that sound customer relationships, based on a public relations philosophy, must precede sales -- not the other way around as the marketing fad prevalent in education, healthcare & manufacturing seems to suggest.

In addition, "Successful marketing involves two basic communications functions," he adds. "First gathering intelligence from the market itself for planning market strategies and, second, communicating to consumers and motivating them to buy." In a speech to the Adcraft Club of Detroit, Petersen verbalized the philosophy car makers should have adopted long ago:

1. Building a listening and caring process into the corporate structure, starting in the board room.

"The products we make -- the way we design and build them, the way we advertise and promote them, the way we sell and service them -- reflect a deepening respect for each individual we serve. Each product must be created from beginning to end with the consumer's needs and desires foremost in mind."

2. Traditional consumer communications must be questioned today. Network tv must be balanced against home shopping shows on cable or local stations, advertising cassettes, video-catalogs, targeted sampling. Also video-recorders that let viewers tape favorite shows and skip over the commercials. "In the long run, there is a very real possibility that television advertising, as we have known it, may become virtually obsolete." These new communication formats are closer to public relations approaches than to advertising.

LISTENING WORKS

Product design thru consumer dialogue was used by Ford to develop its World Cars. Customers said they wanted fuel efficiency, room enough for comfort, good handling, no harsh ride, quality in every detail. Ford built this into its first thoughts for the Escort. Result: in 6 months it became the best-selling car line in America, and outsold every imported car in '81. Continued "caring for people" resulted in 50 design changes in the '82 models.

TOP GOV'T PR JOBS, CONTACTS THEY BRING,
ARE SPRINGBOARD TO HAVING YOUR OWN FIRM;
CONSIDER PETER HANNAFORD'S SUCCESS

After 32 yrs with Dep't of Labor, John Leslie didn't start a new firm but added luster to an existing one, The Kamber Group (D.C.). He cites three advantages of gov't service for pr pros: 1) an inside perspective on gov't, what it can & can't do, its motivating force (not profit as in private sector), its pressures; 2) perspective on how private sector reacts to gov't & how that reaction affects gov't; 3) invaluable contacts.

After 11 yrs in local gov't, Nancy Wolfe formed The Wolfe Group (Winston-Salem, N.C.). "It gave me the opportunity to run a pr shop. I had staffers. I was used to budgets. It gave me a better understanding of bureaucracies which exist both in the private & public sectors."

Bob Woodrum, dpa at OPM under Carter, has formed Corporate Communications (McLean, Va.). He describes his gov't yrs as "enlightening" and gives credit to "lots of exposure all across the board."

Ex-White House media liaison staffer Patricia Bario has her own pr firm (Silver Spring, Md.), is now publishing The News Summary for public readership. Coveted during the Carter adm -- but not publicly available then -- briefing summarizes 150 newspapers daily, evening network tv news & editorial cartoons. (For info write 1213 Clement Place, Silver Spring, Md. 20910.)

Benefiting mightily from gov't connections is the Hannaford Co. (D.C.). Peter Hannaford served as speech writer & advisor to Reagan. He has since bought out his partner, Mike Deaver, now White House deputy chief of staff, & absorbed another firm Potomac International owned by suspended security advisor Richard Allen. Hannaford now ranks in the top 40 firms nationwide. List of accomplishments includes:

1. Taiwan Shoe industry sought firm's help to block extension of import controls. Reagan lifted the barriers June 30.
2. Oilmen & bankers turned to Hannaford for help in getting financial concessions for a proposed pipeline to carry Alaskan natural gas thru Canada to the US. Reagan signed special financing legislation for the $43 billion project Dec. 15.
3. Tosco Oil needed help to save $1.1 billion in federal loan guarantees for a synthetic fuel project. The loan package was spared the budget cuts.

"Having Hannaford in their corner may not have been the greatest determining factor for each of these interests, but it didn't hurt them either," says article in 12/6 Washington Post.

Launching successful counseling firms gets tougher as the field matures & institutionalizes, but gov't positions provide a way to leap the barriers.

ALLEN'S STRATEGY

Explaining why he blitzed tv interview shows to defend himself against allegation that forced him to take leave as Pres. Reagan's security advisor, Richard Allen said:

"What happens generally is that my remarks wind up on your cutting room floor. So my choice has been to have formats such as this where my views could be presented in an unedited way."

A CHRISTMAS CAROL, BY COMPUTER, WITH A MORAL FOR PRACTITIONERS

You don't have to wait for the Perry Como special this year to hear the 12 Days of Christmas, but you may have to wait 'til the middle of the night for the computer version from Periphonics. The Long Island maker of computer systems that talk wanted to thank customers by programming one to sing the carol and wish callers a Merry Christmas.

Begun last year, the novel greeting this year was expanded nationwide, using 800-numbers. Due to immense coverage by newspapers & radio stations across the country, the 18 WATS lines have had to be expanded to 35 since Dec. 7th. "The telephone company told us of the line delay, and we are adding more lines as soon as they are available," Hugh Gigante, dir mktg svcs, told prr. "For every 35 callers that get a line into the system, there are 150 callers per line still waiting. The computer can handle it, but the telephone system can't."

Tho the song sounds like a recording of a woman's voice (prp finally got through by calling the local number), Gigante explains that it is, in fact, the computer. "The song was originally recorded by Dee Dee Kelly. Then it was separated into tones & syllables and stored -- much like a calculator stores numbers. Actually, the computer could sing Jingle Bells without recording again, because all the tones and sounds are there."

The program starts with the computer offering instructions. If your preference is to hear only the 8 days of Christmas or 5 days, and you have a push-button phone, you can select which days you would like to hear. The system is the "size of a thumb" and works on electrical impulses. To hear a computer sing the 12 Days of Christmas, call 800/832-1755 in New York State, 800/645-1710 outside New York, or 516/981-6000, any time, day or night, between now and Christmas. And we here at prr wish you ... luck!

MORE ON NETWORKS VS. MULTI-CITY FIRMS:
"CONTROL" OR "DIFFERENT KINDS OF THINKING"?
EITHER WAY, GROWTH FOR CONSULTANTS IS EVIDENT

Another growing network is Pinnacle Group with 8 US offices & international representation in Canada, Europe & the Far East (see prr 10/26). With only one office per city, they are controlling their growth, planning to add 4 or 5 firms this coming year. Alvin Busse, A.R. Busse & Assocs (Houston) is current chairman. Member firms meet 4 or 5 times yearly, charge each other an agreed upon hourly sum for services. "We give special attention to a Pinnacle customer -- management attention," Amelia Lobsenz, Lobsenz-Stevens (NYC) told prr. "Another advantage of a network is that you get different kinds of thinking. No matter how good a firm is with lots of offices, I think there is a tendency to be the same, which may be good but still the same. When we get together we do fantastic brainstorming. We learn things from each other. It's a unique situation."

Others feel networks cannot be compared with multi-branch firms. "The difference," says Harold Burson, Burson-Marsteller (NYC), "is control. We spend a lot of money & energy to guarantee a single standard -- professionalism. We have a lot of inter-change, and this is difficult to fund when you're a network. We get together regionally & nationally. We have training sessions. We'll have about 40 different training